Steady rapids are an indication of fast sea flows materialising and leaving the material made and dragged where they meet. With time, the soft heap up and structure is pushed seawards, eroding into the ocean.

Sea flows can become cut their way into a bank some and some material (sand, silt, and rocks) after they become away.

Coastlines

A coastline is just the position the land and the ocean is in space. It incorporates all the sea flows, processes, rapids, currents, rapids and eddies that flow up toward the beach of the land. These highlights may all be found near one another in a coastline.

Coastlines change with time. At the point where ocean flows, sea and tide, coastlines are dynamic. Steady erosion or accretion develops. However, changes the shape and type of coastline. These highlights, for example, islands and bays are shaped and move according to highlights, however, separately.

The coastline of the world's largest measure around 175,000 km (110,000 miles).

Coastlines are formed from multiple points of view — the shore of a large peninsula by sea flows and waterways entering the ocean, and furthermore by erosion by waves. Though sea and rough coastlines are normally formed by erosion while steady sea flows, sedimentary and structural coastlines are generally those shaped from sedimentary stones. Earth as structural developments can become push up new landforms or soft soil may drag from shore by mountains, making new sediment features.

Continental Shelf

This is the part of the continent that extends out into the ocean with no huge ridges and with shallow waters near it.

Two significant terms are typically utilized in portraying the continental shelf. The shelf break and the continental slope.

Schaefer an American scholar brought both the qualitative and quantitative revolution in geographic development Shortly after this publication were discussed the paradigmatic shifts in a discipline by Thomas S Kuhn another American scholar through his seminal work in which he painted a picture of the development of science quite unlike that had gone before In order to elucidate this process of development of science Kuhn prepared a model termed as the Paradigm of Science Distinct parallels may be sought between the historical evolution of scientific discipline as explained by Thomas Kuhn and the historical evolution of the discipline of geography Seeking inspiration from the works of both of the great scholars mentioned above the present book examines the evolution of geographical thought from the perspective of Thomas Kuhn Two publications of mine 2008 2014 are on this line only However the methodological literature to understand the philosophical background making possible this disciplinary growth is too small The purpose here is to explore and screen the growth and development of Geography under sequential methodological changes over time in the light of various paradigmatic shifts with the acknowledgement of crises and revolutionary phases of development in the discipline Accordingly the work identifies eight paradigmatic shifts intercepted by eight phases of crises in the discipline
