
■ U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE (USDA) is the lead agency for the program. The program is authorized under the National Organic Act of 1990, which was amended in 1992 and 1994. The program is designed to protect the integrity of the organic food supply and to provide information to consumers about the products they are buying. The program is administered by the National Organic Program (NOP), which is part of the USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service. The NOP is responsible for developing and implementing the National Organic Standards (NOS), which are the rules that govern the production, handling, and labeling of organic products. The NOS are designed to ensure that organic products are produced using sustainable farming practices and that they are free from synthetic pesticides and fertilizers. The NOP also oversees the certification process for organic producers and handlers, and it provides information to consumers about the products they are buying.
