

CELL REPRODUCTION

Cell Division

Describe the process below, which occurs before binary fission in eukaryotes. Indicate the sequential order.

At the start of mitosis, prophase II is started with two sister chromatids, prophase II, metaphase II, anaphase II, and telophase II. Prophase II is the first phase of mitosis. Prophase II begins with the disjoining and tight coiling of DNA into two distinct chromosomes that are bound with histone molecules. During the II phase, each chromosome is copied. The two copies of each chromosome, called chromatids, stay bound to each other by the centromere. As the time for metaphase and the two new chromosomes move and align. Two pairs of dark spots called centrioles appear near the disjoining point. The centromeres move toward opposite poles of the cell and spindle fibers develop from the centromeres to prepare for anaphase.

Metaphase is characterized by the alignment of chromosomes. During metaphase, sister chromatids move the chromosomes to the center of the dividing cell.

During anaphase, the chromatids of each chromosome separate. The centromeres and closely bound sister chromatids pull toward the dividing cell. After the chromosomes separate, they are considered to be individual chromosomes.

Telophase marks the end of mitosis. After the chromosomes have separated, the cell begins to divide. The spindle fibers disappear and the nuclear envelope reforms. A completely new chromosome set is formed and the cell is divided into two daughter cells.

Which events represent the first phase of mitosis in eukaryotes? Select the two correct responses from the list below.

Which two responses are correct?

In the diagram, identify the sequence with the steps of mitosis and binary fission. Mark the sequence correct or incorrect.
