The second model is a growth-differentiation model. Some cells may express properties that allow them to proliferate, while others are able to differentiate into other cell types and/or other growth promoting properties. For example, the Notch signaling pathway is able to differentiate into a growth effect or PCNA expression. Some cells produce the Notch signal, which leads to the expression of PCNA, without having other PCNA expression. Some cells may also be expressing other genes that would lead to PCNA expression, independent of the Notch pathway. The two models are able to differentiate into the growth promoting properties and the differentiation properties.
