Spanning the old theories, the Ricardian hypothesis, the static and dynamic Heckscher-Ohlin model, the neofactor proportions, and the neotechnology theories, it also contains the new theories including various models of intra-industry trade and the dynamic models of endogenous growth and trade. Gains from trade and trade policy issues are comprehensively analysed. The various theories are presented verbally, geometrically, and mathematically. Selling Empire Jonathan Eacott, 2016-02-02. 2017 Bentley Book Prize. World History Association. Linking four continents over three centuries, Selling Empire demonstrates the centrality of India both as an idea and a place to the making of a global British imperial system. In the seventeenth century, Britain was economically, politically, and militarily weaker than India, but Britons increasingly made use of India's strengths to build their own empire in both America and Asia. Early English colonial promoters first envisioned America as a potential India, hoping that the nascent Atlantic colonies could produce Asian raw materials. When this vision failed to materialize, Britain's circulation of Indian manufactured goods, from umbrellas to cottons to Africa, Europe, and America, then established an empire of goods, and the supposed good of empire. Eacott recasts the British empire's chronology and geography by situating the development of consumer culture, the American Revolution, and British industrialization in the commercial intersections linking the Atlantic and Indian Oceans. From the seventeenth into the nineteenth century and beyond, the evolving networks, ideas, and fashions that bound India, Britain, and America shaped persisting global structures of economic and cultural interdependence.
