

Worksheet: Limiting Reagents and Chemical Equations Practical Examples

Proposition 1: Identify which is the product of combustion reactions and the reactants.
Proposition 2: Identify the product, reactant, and the stoichiometric coefficient.

Part 1: About the Limiting Reagent:

The limiting reagent in a reaction is the reactant that determines the amount of product formed. When you mix two reactants in a certain amount, the reaction will not occur because there is not enough of the other reactant to react with it. This amount is called the limiting reagent or limiting agent. The amount of the other reactant that is consumed is called the excess reagent or excess agent. The limiting reagent is the reactant that "runs out" first.

Key Questions:

1. Which reactant runs out first in the limiting reagent and excess reagent?

2. In reaction 1, what is the amount of the limiting reagent? What are the excess reagent?

3. In reaction 2, what is the amount of the limiting reagent? What are the excess reagent?

4. In reaction 3, what is the amount of the limiting reagent? What are the excess reagent?

5. Balance the chemical equation, then identify the reactants and the products.

6. Identify the coefficients in the balanced equation (reactant). What limiting reagent is used in the reaction?
