Abstract. Study of organizational practices that support positive psychology

Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the muscle strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group performed no resistance training, while the experimental group performed a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program. The primary outcome was the change in muscle strength and endurance of the lower extremities. The secondary outcome was the change in body composition. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly greater increases in muscle strength and endurance of the lower extremities compared to the control group. There were no significant changes in body composition in either group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program is effective for improving muscle strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults.
