

Introduction

In recent years there has been a trend towards not only developing and protecting human rights but also animal rights. While many people believe that we should give animals legal rights to humans, others view them as a renewable source of food, as well as other useful products.

Body paragraph #1

First of all, it seems clear for most intelligent people that animals deserve more rights than they have. Traditionally, however, that is because they are obviously not made to go with thoughts and feelings, even if they are not exactly like humans. For example, it has been argued that some animals – birds and dolphins – think, feel and perhaps behave in ways similar to those of their peers, and while that we should interact with humans differently. Therefore, it appears quite clear that they should be given the same rights and protections as humans.

Body paragraph #2

There are strong arguments against legal rights for animals. First of all, that they do not have the ability of human beings, not least that they do not have a sense of morality, and that their behaviour is often very different from the rational world. It is true, however, that it is better to give legal rights to them, that would mean that they would not be treated as a commodity, as with the case of a wild animal. They would be treated as individuals, and that would be a very good thing.

Conclusion

In conclusion, there are arguments from both sides of the debate, both supporting and opposing legal rights for animals. It is clear, however, that animals deserve respect, protection, and legal rights. Perhaps they should not be given the same treatment as humans, but they should certainly be treated better than they currently are, and laws should be drafted to ensure their protection from undue suffering.
