The Opposite of Cheating Tricia Bertram Gallant, David A. Rettinger, 2025-03-11 In these days of an ever expanding internet generative AI and term paper mills students may find it too easy and tempting to cheat and teachers may think they can't keep up What's needed and what Tricia Bertram Gallant and David A Rettinger offer in this timely book is a new approach one that works with the realities of the twenty first century not just to protect academic integrity but also to maximize opportunities for students to learn The Opposite of Cheating presents a positive forward looking research backed vision for what classroom integrity can look like in the GenAI era both in cyberspace and on campus Accordingly the book outlines workable measures teachers can use to better understand why students cheat and to prevent cheating while aiming to enhance learning and integrity Bertram Gallant and Rettinger provide practical suggestions to help faculty revise the conversation around integrity refocus classes and students on learning reconsider the structure and goals of assessment and generally reframe our response to cheating At the core of this strategy is a call for teachers academic staff institutional leaders and administrators to rethink how we show up for students and to reinforce and fully support quality teaching learning and assessment With its evidentiary basis and its useful tips for instructors across disciplines levels of experience and modes of instruction this book offers a much needed chance to pause rethink our purpose and refocus on what matters creating classes that center human interactions that foster the personal and professional growth of our students

The Microbial Regulation of Global Biogeochemical Cycles Johannes Rousk, Per Bengtson, 2014-10-17 Global biogeochemical cycles of carbon and nutrients are increasingly affected by human activities So far modeling has been central for our understanding of how this will affect ecosystem functioning and the biogeochemical cycling of carbon and nutrients These models have been forced to adopt a reductive approach built on the flow of carbon and nutrients between pools that are difficult or even impossible to verify with empirical evidence Furthermore while some of these models include the response in physiology ecology and biogeography of primary producers to environmental change the microbial part of the ecosystem is generally poorly represented or lacking altogether The principal pool of carbon and nutrients in soil is the organic matter. The turnover of this reservoir is governed by microorganisms that act as catalytic converters of environmental conditions into biogeochemical cycling of carbon and nutrients. The dependency of this conversion activity on individual environmental conditions such as pH, moisture and temperature has been frequently studied. On the contrary, only rarely have the microorganisms involved in carrying out the processes been identified and one of the biggest challenges for advancing our understanding of biogeochemical processes is to identify the microorganisms carrying out a specific set of metabolic processes and how they partition their carbon and nutrient use. We also need to identify the factors governing these activities and if they result in feedback mechanisms that alter the growth activity and interaction between primary producers and microorganisms. By determining how different groups of microorganisms respond to individual environmental conditions by allocating carbon and nutrients to production of biomass, CO₂ and other products, a mechanistic as well as quantitative understanding of formation and decomposition of organic matter and the production and consumption of greenhouse gases can be achieved. In this Research Topic supported by the Swedish research councils programme Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services in a Changing Landscape BECC, we intend to promote this alternative framework to address how cycling of carbon and nutrients will be altered in a changing environment from the first principle mechanisms that drive them, namely the ecology, physiology and biogeography of microorganisms and on up to emerging global biogeochemical patterns. This novel and unconventional approach has the potential to generate fresh insights that can open up new horizons and stimulate rapid conceptual development in our basic understanding of the regulating factors for global biogeochemical cycles. The vision for the research topic is to facilitate such progress by bringing together leading scientists as proponents of several disciplines. By bridging Microbial Ecology and Biogeochemistry, connecting microbial activities at the micro scale to carbon fluxes at the ecosystem scale and linking above and belowground ecosystem functioning, we can leap forward from the current understanding of the global biogeochemical cycles. New Scientist, 1975. The effect of hearing loss on neural processing Jonathan E. Peelle, Arthur

Wingfield, 2015-06-03. Efficient auditory processing requires the rapid integration of transient sensory inputs. This is exemplified in human speech perception in which long stretches of a complex acoustic signal are typically processed accurately and essentially in real time. Spoken language thus presents listeners' auditory systems with a considerable challenge even when acoustic input is clear. However, auditory processing ability is frequently compromised due to congenital or acquired hearing loss or altered through background noise or assistive devices such as cochlear implants. How does loss of sensory fidelity impact neural processing efficiency and health? How does this ultimately influence behavior? This Research Topic explores the neural consequences of hearing loss, including basic processing carried out in the auditory periphery, computations in subcortical nuclei and primary auditory cortex, and higher level cognitive processes such as those involved in human speech perception. By pulling together data from a variety of disciplines and perspectives, we gain a more complete
