Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus is the most frequent cause of nosocomial infection, and the use of antibiotics has led to the development of strains resistant to many drugs. The aim of this study was to determine the prevalence of methicillin-resistant strains of S. aureus in the intensive care unit (ICU) of a tertiary care hospital in Bogotá, Colombia. A total of 100 strains of S. aureus were isolated from patients in the ICU, and 10% were found to be methicillin-resistant.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic and resistance training, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a maximal aerobic test, a submaximal aerobic test, and a resistance test. Health was measured using a series of questionnaires that assessed lifestyle factors, such as diet, exercise, and stress. The results of the study showed that the training group had significant improvements in physical fitness and health compared to the control group. The training group had a significant increase in maximal aerobic power, submaximal aerobic power, and resistance. They also had a significant decrease in body mass index, blood pressure, and cholesterol levels. The control group had no significant changes in any of these measures. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary, middle-aged men.
