

Section 1: The Science of Light

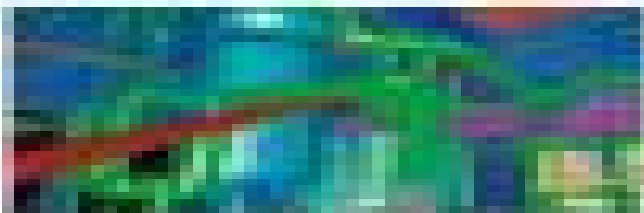

Figure 1: Dispersion of white light by a glass prism. The light is refracted and split into its constituent colors due to the difference in refractive indices for different wavelengths.

Light is a form of energy that travels in waves. It is made up of particles called photons. The color of light is determined by its wavelength. The visible spectrum of light ranges from approximately 400 nm (violet) to 700 nm (red).

When light travels from one medium to another, it changes speed and direction. This is called refraction. The amount of refraction depends on the refractive index of the medium. The refractive index is a measure of how much the speed of light is reduced when it enters a medium.

Dispersion is the process by which white light is split into its constituent colors. This occurs because different colors of light have different wavelengths and therefore different refractive indices. As a result, different colors of light are refracted by different amounts when they pass through a medium.

Dispersion is a key concept in the study of light and is responsible for many natural phenomena, including rainbows and the colors of the sky. Understanding dispersion is essential for many applications in science and technology, including optics and telecommunications.

Section 2: The Properties of Light

Property	Description
Wavelength	The distance between two consecutive peaks or troughs of a wave. It is denoted by the Greek letter lambda (λ).
Frequency	The number of waves that pass a fixed point in a given time. It is denoted by the Greek letter nu (ν).
Amplitude	The maximum displacement of a wave from its equilibrium position. It is denoted by the letter A.
Speed	The distance traveled by a wave per unit time. It is denoted by the letter c.
Intensity	The power per unit area carried by a wave. It is denoted by the letter I.
Phase	The position of a wave relative to a reference point. It is denoted by the Greek letter phi (ϕ).
Polarization	The orientation of the oscillations of a wave. It is denoted by the letter P.
Diffraction	The bending of waves around obstacles or through openings. It is denoted by the letter D.
Interference	The combination of two or more waves to form a new wave. It is denoted by the letter I.
Reflection	The bouncing back of a wave when it hits a surface. It is denoted by the letter R.
Refraction	The change in direction of a wave as it passes from one medium to another. It is denoted by the letter n.

Light has many properties that make it unique. It travels at a constant speed in a vacuum, and it can be polarized. Light also exhibits wave-particle duality, meaning it can behave both as a wave and as a particle. These properties are essential for understanding the behavior of light in various situations.
