

Diagram of a greenhouse showing the effect of atmospheric CO₂ on the temperature inside. The greenhouse effect is caused by the trapping of heat by the glass walls and roof, which prevents the heat from escaping. This results in a warmer interior temperature, which is beneficial for growing plants.

The greenhouse effect is a natural process that warms the Earth's surface. When the Sun's rays hit the Earth, they are absorbed by the ground and the atmosphere. The ground then radiates the heat back outwards as long-wave radiation. The atmosphere, which contains greenhouse gases, traps some of this radiation and re-emits it back towards the Earth's surface. This process is known as the greenhouse effect and it is what keeps the Earth warm enough to support life.
