

Intergroup Attraction

A common theme in intergroup research is the tendency for groups to be more attractive to members of other groups than to members of their own group. This is often referred to as the "outgroup bias" or "outgroup attraction." This bias can be explained by a number of factors, including the desire for social approval, the need for social identity, and the desire for social comparison.

One of the most common explanations for outgroup attraction is the desire for social approval. People often want to be liked and accepted by others, and this can lead them to be more attractive to members of other groups than to members of their own group.

Another explanation for outgroup attraction is the need for social identity. People often want to belong to a group, and this can lead them to be more attractive to members of other groups than to members of their own group.

Intergroup Attraction and the Outgroup

Intergroup attraction is a complex phenomenon that has been studied for many years. It is a topic that is still being researched, and there is still much to be learned about it.
