

IV - COMMUNAUTES

Le concept de communauté est le concept le plus tangible en écologie. Les différences entre la forêt, la prairie, le désert, et les marais salants etc... sont bien connues et il est possible, (au moins d'une manière générale) de décrire les genres de plantes ou de communautés animales liées à chacun de ces écosystèmes. Dans ce chapitre, nous examinerons deux principes importants dans l'organisation de la communauté : la dominance écologique et

Le concept de niche écologique.

IV -1 Dominance écologique et espèce clé

Les communautés biologiques sont typiquement dominées par une ou un groupe restreint d'espèces qui influencent considérablement la nature de l'environnement local. Toutes les autres espèces dans cette communauté doivent s'adapter aux conditions créées par les dominants. Les Communautés sont souvent désignées par le nom de l'organisme dominant (forêt de sapins noirs, communauté d'huître, récif de corail). Il n'est pas toujours facile d'indiquer ce qui constitue un organisme dominant. Il peut être le plus abondant, le plus grand, ou le plus productif, ou il peut d'une autre façon exercer la plus grande influence sur le reste de la communauté. Les espèces dominantes sont souvent ainsi parce qu'elles occupent l'espace qui pourrait autrement être occupé par d'autres espèces. Quand une espèce dominante est éliminée, la communauté change. Parfois, la disparition d'une seule espèce peut transformer le cadre fondamental d'une communauté. De telles espèces sont appelées des espèces clés. Ex : Quand l'étoile de mer (prédateur de moules) a été expérimentalement enlevée du littoral de l'Etat de Washington, les moules se sont multipliés, colonisant tout l'espace précédemment occupé par environ 25 espèces d'invertébrés et algues.

IV – 2 Le concept de niche écologique

La niche est définie comme la place de l'animal dans son environnement biotique. L'ensemble de conditions dans lesquelles une population animale
