Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the performance of 12 male and 12 female college students. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group performed a baseline test of 1000 m, 2000 m, 4000 m, 8000 m, 16000 m, and 32000 m. The experimental group performed the same tests after 12 weeks of training. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly better performance than the control group in all tests. The improvement was most significant in the 1000 m and 2000 m tests. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the performance of college students in short-distance running.
