- THE 2008 BUDGET will have a significant impact on the way in which the Government will be able to fund the NHS. The Government has announced that it will be introducing a new system of funding the NHS, which will be based on a new system of taxation. This will be a major change to the way in which the NHS is funded, and it is important that we understand the implications of this change.

Abstract

Background: The cervical spine is a complex structure that is subjected to a variety of stresses and strains. The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of different postures on the cervical spine.

Methods: A total of 100 participants were recruited for this study. They were asked to perform three different postures: neutral, forward head, and rounded shoulders. The cervical spine was measured using a 3D motion capture system.

Results: The results showed that the forward head posture and rounded shoulders posture resulted in a significant increase in the curvature of the cervical spine. The neutral posture resulted in a normal curvature of the cervical spine.

Conclusion: The study found that the forward head posture and rounded shoulders posture are harmful to the cervical spine. It is recommended that individuals should maintain a neutral posture to avoid any complications.

Keywords: Cervical spine, Posture, Forward head posture, Rounded shoulders posture, 3D motion capture system.
