Curtis,2012-08-10 Since the first transgenic plants were produced back in the early 1980s there have been substantial developments towards the genetic engineering of most crops of our world Initial studies using isolated plant cells and removing their cell walls to form protoplasts offered the possibility of transferring genetic material by Agrobacterium mediated gene transfer chemical agents or electrical charges However in those cases where isolated protoplasts could be transformed often a shoot regeneration system was not available to induce the production of transgenic plants and any such regenerated plants were subject to mutation or chromosomal of cultured plant organs such as leaf abnormalities By the mid 1980s the use of disks offered the convenience of combining gene transfer plant regeneration and selection of transformants in a single system This approach enabled the production of stable phenotypically normal transgenic potato and tomato plants in culture By the late 1980s the use of biolistics offered a means of inserting foreign genes into plant cells which were inaccessible to Agrobacterium infection Even today this technology is now standard practice for the production of some transgenic plants Federation Proceedings Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology,1981 Vols for 1942 include proceedings of the American Physiological Society
