

ENDOCRINE SYSTEM

Endocrine System: WORKING TOGETHER

Each organ system works on other systems within the body to do its "job". See below to learn just some of the ways that the endocrine system interacts with other organ systems.

Nervous System

Circulatory System

Endocrine System: FACTS

Endocrine System: PROBLEMS

Most of the time, the endocrine system works perfectly well. However, sometimes problems can arise.

Diabetes

Diabetes is a condition that causes high blood glucose (sugar) levels. It is caused by the body being unable to either produce or use the hormone insulin. So, the glucose (sugar) gets stuck in the blood. Symptoms include increased thirst, weight gain, changes in vision, frequent urination, slow wound healing, and changes in mood. It can also lead to long-term complications like heart disease, kidney problems, and nerve damage.

Endocrine System: FUNCTIONS

The endocrine system is a network of glands that produce hormones. Hormones are the body's chemical messengers that carry information and instructions from one cell to another. Hormones control many, many important processes in our bodies.

Function of the Endocrine System

Endocrine System: FIGHT-OR-FLIGHT

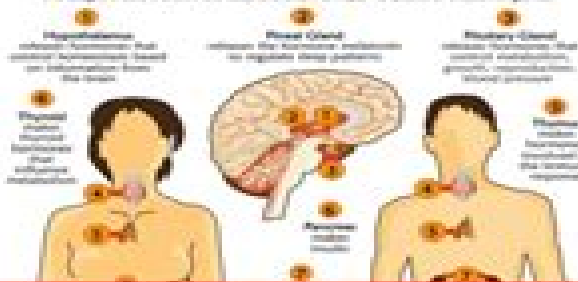

The fight-or-flight response is a reaction that occurs in the body when we are really frightened. The brain (specifically the hypothalamus) tells our adrenal glands to fight the danger. The adrenal glands release hormones that increase our heart rate, blood pressure, and energy levels so that we can fight or flee. The fight-or-flight response is triggered by the release of hormones that prepare the body to either fight or flee. It is a survival mechanism that helps us respond to stress. In other words, the body's response to stress prepares us to fight or flee.

Today, we do not usually fight or flee as we have to. But the fight-or-flight response is still there. It is a survival mechanism that helps us respond to stress. The diagram shows the hormones that are released and the effect they have on the body.

Endocrine System: GLANDS

A gland is a structure that produces and releases substances that perform a specific function in the body. There are two types of glands: endocrine glands and exocrine glands. Endocrine glands release hormones into the bloodstream, while exocrine glands release substances through ducts. The endocrine system consists of several glands, including the hypothalamus, pituitary, thyroid, parathyroid, adrenal, and pancreas. These glands work together to produce and release hormones that regulate many of the body's functions.

Endocrine System: KEY TERMS

Term	Definition
Endocrine System	Network of endocrine glands that make, store, and release hormones.
Hormone	Chemical messengers that carry information and instructions from one cell to another.

Endocrine System: HORMONES

Hormones are chemical signals. Hormones are released by endocrine glands into the bloodstream. They travel through the blood to target cells, where they bind to receptors and cause a specific response. Hormones can affect many different parts of the body, including growth, metabolism, and reproduction.

Endocrine System: FEEDBACK LOOPS

Endocrine activities are regulated by complex feedback loops. These feedback loops help the body maintain a stable internal environment. There are two main types of feedback loops: negative feedback loops and positive feedback loops. Negative feedback loops are the most common and help to bring the body back to a stable state after a disturbance. Positive feedback loops are less common and help to amplify a response.

The diagram shows a negative feedback loop for blood glucose regulation. When blood glucose levels are low, the pancreas releases the hormone insulin, which causes cells to take up glucose from the blood. This lowers blood glucose levels back to normal. When blood glucose levels are high, the pancreas releases the hormone glucagon, which causes the liver to release glucose into the blood. This raises blood glucose levels back to normal.

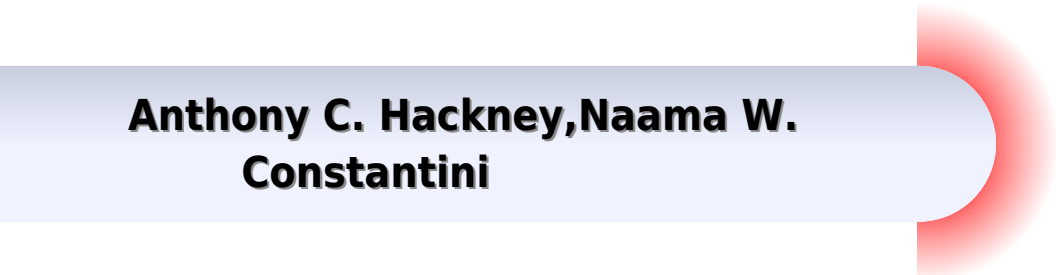

Not all blood sugar changes are regulated by the hormone insulin and glucagon. In some cases, the body uses other mechanisms to maintain blood sugar levels. For example, the liver can store glucose as glycogen and release it when needed. The body also uses other hormones, like growth hormone, to regulate blood sugar levels.
