

A technical line drawing of an engine's cylinder head and intake manifold. A knock sensor, depicted as a blue hexagonal bolt, is shown being installed into a pre-drilled hole in the cylinder head. A blue corrugated hose, representing the sensor's wiring, extends from the sensor and connects to a blue electrical plug. This plug is inserted into a port on the intake manifold. A white cylindrical component, likely a valve cover or breather, is also visible on the left side of the cylinder head. Arrows point from the text labels to their respective parts.
