

Conclusion

The research is a step forward in the American Education sector; it became clearer that other countries should as well implement English lessons in their schools (Anonymous, 1999) to each and every foreign student studying in their institutions from other nations that don't speak English as there native language.

Secondly, the research was used as a way of testing the foreign students' perceptions on English as a language, and from the findings it is evidently clear that students who were from countries that never spoke or learned English in their schools, had difficulties in understanding their lectures and this definitely reduced their interest and progress in their studies. The introduction of English courses will increase their interest and advancement in their studies by approximately 85-94% which will ensure that they are successful in their studies.
