- Abstracts: The book includes an abstract introduction, which includes a brief introduction to the book's content and a list of abstracts for each chapter.

Abstract

Background: Studies using computerized systems for monitoring and control of anesthesia have shown that the use of such systems can reduce the risk of anesthesia-related errors. However, the use of such systems is not widespread, and the reasons for this are not well understood. One of the main barriers to the widespread use of such systems is the lack of evidence that they are safe and effective. This is due to the fact that most studies of such systems have been small and have not been conducted in a controlled manner. In addition, many of the studies have not been conducted in a realistic setting, and the results may not be generalizable to the clinical setting. Therefore, it is important to conduct large, controlled studies of such systems in a realistic setting in order to determine their safety and effectiveness.
