

Unit 2: Institutions of Government

Separation of Power and Checks and Balances

Overview: Who can do what? This longer unit covers the institutions that create government policy – the most important part of the course, and the most emphasized on the exam. The founders listed the legislative branch first in the Constitution, signifying its primacy in their view of the new government they were creating. But in the modern political arena, the President shines above everyone else. In fact, most Americans believe the President can do anything he wants, and presidential candidates back up that belief by making promises during the campaign season about what they will do if elected. In reality, however, perhaps the most important institution is the one not mentioned in the Constitution at all – the bureaucracy. From the roads we travel to the foods we eat, from the parks we visit and the air we breathe, federal regulations and oversight abound. Finally, the judiciary has been described as the least dangerous branch, but courts often have the final word on what laws – and even the Constitution – truly mean.

Essential Knowledge: These phrases come from the framework established by College Board. For each sub-heading, students should be able to provide a description or explanation prior to an assessment.

- The republican ideal is manifested in the structure and operation of the legislative branch.
  - Describe the different structures, powers, and functions of each house of Congress
  - Explain how the structure, powers, and functions of Congress affect the policy-making process
  - Explain how Congress's behavior is influenced by elections, parties, and divided government
- The presidency has been enhanced beyond its expressed constitutional powers
  - Explain how the president can implement a policy agenda
  - Explain how the president's agenda can create tension and confrontations with Congress
  - Explain how presidents have interpreted and justified their use of formal and informal powers
  - Explain how communication technology has changed the president's relationship with the national constituency and the other branches.
