The screenshot shows the Windows XP Start menu. On the left, there are links for 'All Programs', 'Recent Programs', 'Favorites', and 'Control Panel'. The 'All Programs' link is circled in red. A red line connects this link to a larger, semi-transparent window on the right that displays the 'All Programs' folder. This window also has a red circle around its title bar and another red circle around the 'All Programs' folder icon. Below this window is a taskbar with several icons, including the Start button, a clock, and a volume icon.

A diagram showing a vertical assembly. On the left, there is a rectangular component with internal details, and below it, a smaller rectangular component. A large curly bracket on the right side of these two components points to a single rectangular component on the right. This component is connected to a vertical shaft or rod that passes through a series of components, ending in a base.

A diagram of a simple neural network. It consists of two layers of nodes. The first layer has three nodes, each with a different colored input (yellow, red, and blue). The second layer has two nodes, each with a different colored output (green and purple). The nodes are connected by lines, representing the network's structure.
