Lazimut Haiti Oentre Hier Et Demain Quoi Faire:

L' Azimut Haiti, 1804-2004 Arsene Laurent B.,2003 Ce livre commence par les réflexions de l'auteur sur les faits qui ont précédé et suivi la proclamation de l'Indépendance d'Haïti en 1804 résultant de la victoire des Noirs transplantés d'Afrique sur l'armée napoléonienne. L'analyse soumise des conditions actuelles de retard dans le processus de développement du pays indique une persistance de facteurs liés de la diversité ethnique des rapports discriminatoires développés entre les couches sociales d'un faux concept du Pouvoir souvent assimilé à la puissance de destruction par beaucoup de dirigeants et d'une carence de motivation chez certains membres des élites vis-à-vis des citoyens. Déterminé à faire aboutir son étude à un stade de propositions concrètes et rationnelles, l'auteur applique aux problèmes de développement une formule qui tient tant de la science inductive que de la philosophie ontologique. Cette formule propre à transformer l'élément humain en citoyen conscient et intéressé permet de focaliser l'attention du lecteur sur deux objectifs prioritaires : la radicalisation de l'obscurantisme et l'augmentation du Produit Intérieur Brut de la Nation Haïtienne. Passant alors en revue les quasi-solutions de fortune antinationales ou affairistes, l'auteur opte pour la voie endogène applicable en association avec des partenaires consentants du secteur néolibéral en pleine conscience des exigences de la mondialisation. Le progrès escompté est ainsi décrit en termes modestes et accessibles, assisté par la mise en œuvre intensive de l'énergie alternative solaire photovoltaïque au service de l'éducation de masse. L'association d'efforts fournis par les firmes privées, les organisations non gouvernementales, la Communauté Internationale et les Ministères focalisés à travers un plan national de développement bien conçu permet enfin d'entrevoir dans le moyen terme le renouveau socio-économique tant souhaité par tous à la veille de la célébration du bicentenaire de l'Indépendance Nationale.

The first expressions of the author relate to the events which took place after Haiti's independence proclamation in January 1804 as a result of the victory over the Napoleon's army by Negroes brought in from Africa. The analysis which follows refers to the slowness of advance in the country associated with ethnic diversity discrimination among competitive social groups, a false interpretation of the power concept too often equaled by leaders to a capacity to destroy. Most obvious was also an absence among the elites of motivation in support of the poor. Determined to reach concrete and rational conclusions, the author seeks and develops a formula based both on historical facts and on an ontological approach. He proposes to apply it for transforming the human elements into motivated citizens, focusing proposed action on two main objectives: the elimination of obscurantism and a substantial growth in the national domestic product. Before finalizing a course of action, the author suggests the rejection of several quasi-options of future planning patterns since their non-patriotic character or their excessive profitability irrespective of public well-being make them unacceptable. Then the selected formula points the way to an endogenous avenue open to an array of partners operating in the neo-liberal sector in full recognition and profit of the exigencies of globalization. The expected progress is described in modest and feasible terms supported by the implementation of alternative energies: solar and photovoltaic at the service
