These findings are not fully consistent for children. Some studies involving children of alcoholics have found that children of alcoholics are at an elevated risk for developing a substance use disorder (e.g., McGue et al., 2001). However, other studies have found that children of alcoholics are not at an elevated risk for developing a substance use disorder (e.g., McGue et al., 2001). The results of the present study suggest that children of alcoholics are at an elevated risk for developing a substance use disorder.
