Environmental Impact Assessment Report For Shell:

Satellite-Based Mitigation and Adaptation Scenarios for Sea Level Rise in the Lower Niger Delta Zahrah

Musa,2018-04-17 The Niger delta with its gentle slope and low elevation is extremely sensitive to effects of climate change Its adaptive capacity is the second lowest in terms of socio economic development in Nigeria Quantitative studies on developing measures for coastal planning and management in the lower Niger delta have been limited by data availability and inaccessibility of parts of the delta The use of satellite data can help bridge the data gap by providing ancillary data imagery elevation altimetry etc that can be used to quantify the effects of SLR in the Niger delta This thesis uses satellite data as the main source for hydrodynamic modelling and GIS analysis Until recently such data might not have the accuracy and precision of directly measured data However recent innovative approaches have enabled better exploitation of satellite data to overcome these limitations and produce adequate results to assess the impact of SLR on the Niger delta in an integrated way that will lead to practical recommendations for adaptation Using projected global eustatic SLR values in combination with land subsidence this thesis estimated SLR levels for the Niger delta and its effect on inundation areas and flood extent The results indicate that the Niger delta is very vulnerable to inundation and that even minimal SLR will affect flooding in the lower Niger delta since the area continues to subside A new coastal vulnerability index was developed in this thesis by evaluating physical social and human influence indicators of exposure susceptibility and resilience The results show that parts of the Niger delta are highly vulnerable to SLR and need adequate mitigation adaptation measures to protect them It is recommended that sustainable local resilience practices already being used in parts of the Niger delta should be included in adaptation planning local communities and the global climate Will the benefits be shared or retained by powerful interests And how will these decisions be made The Shale Dilemma brings together experts working at the forefront of shale gas issues on four continents to explain how countries reach their decisions on shale development Using a common analytical framework the authors identify both local factors and transnational patterns in the decision making process Eight case studies reveal the trade offs each country makes as it decides whether to pursue delay or block development Those outcomes in turn reflect the nature of a country s political process and the power of interest groups on both sides of the issue The contributors also ask whether the economic arguments made by the shale industry and its government supporters have overshadowed the concerns of local communities for information on the effects of shale operations and for tax policies and regulations to ensure broad based economic development and environmental protection As an informative and even handed account The Shale Dilemma recommends practical steps to help countries reach better more transparent and more far sighted decisions Government Reports Announcements & Index ,1988 Systems Analysis and Systems Engineering in Environmental Remediation Programs at the Department of Energy Hanford Site Committee on Remediation of Buried and Tank Wastes,Commission on Geosciences, Environment and Resources,Division on Earth and Life Studies,National Research Council,1998-09-04 The primary purpose of systems engineering is to organize information and knowledge to assist those who manage direct and control the planning development production and operation of the systems necessary to accomplish a given mission However this purpose can be compromised or defeated if information production and organization becomes an end unto itself Systems engineering was developed to help resolve the engineering problems that are encountered when attempting to develop and implement large and complex engineering projects It depends upon integrated program planning and development disciplined and consistent allocation and control of design and development requirements and functions and systems analysis The key thesis of this report is that proper application of systems analysis and systems engineering will improve the management of tank wastes at the Hanford Site significantly thereby leading to reduced life cycle costs for remediation and more effective risk reduction The committee recognizes that evidence for cost savings from application of systems engineering has not been demonstrated yet
