

the perks of being a wallflower

Director: Stephen Daldry

Writer: Stephen Daldry

summary: As a freshman in High School, Charlie, portrayed by Lagan Levinson, struggles with bullies, depression, bad influences and girls. Based on the book written by Stephen Chbosky, the Perks of Being a Wallflower thers as a film. While Charlie wants to survive high school, he forces himself to participate in school functions, to prevent himself from falling back into his depression.
The not so typical teenager finds himself being taken under the wing by a few seniors, and has never been so excited to have friends again. Finally being happy, Charlie experiments with drugs but underlying problems from the past

...is something
...we have
...this or
...through it themselves. This movie is so beautiful. It makes ...laugh, cry, and feel alive in the moment. I think about this movie a lot and the messages it has taught me. I have to say, the acting is subtle but the message is absolutely there. Ezra Miller's character, Patrick, is probably the best developed besides Charlie and I think there is definitely a reason for that.

Film technique: this film uses many lighting tricks to make you feel a certain way. The days are usually cloudy and the nights are long, especially because that is how Charlie sees the world. The story is definitely told through Charlie's point of view and rarely explains the other character's perspectives which makes this story so much more intriguing. Stephen uses lighting to his advantage to make you feel the emotions that are being portrayed, like the light in the tunnel or the dark room Charlie spends his time in.
