10. Measurement errors arise from either systematic sources (which are constant and the resulting measurement error is constant) or random sources (which are random, unpredictable, follow normal distributions, and are not correlated with the measured variable). Systematic errors include calibration errors, quantization errors, and errors due to non-linearities in the measurement system. Random errors include noise, quantization errors, and errors due to non-linearities in the measurement system. The total measurement error is the sum of the systematic and random errors.
