Surviving Large Losses Philip T. Hoffman, Gilles Postel-Vinay, Jean-Laurent Rosenthal, 2009-07 Listen to a short interview with Philip T Hoffman Host Chris Gondek Producer Heron Crane Financial disasters often have long range institutional consequences When financial institutions banks insurance companies brokerage firms stock exchanges collapse new ones take their place and these changes shape markets for decades or even generations Surviving Large Losses explains why such financial crises occur why their effects last so long and what political and economic conditions can help countries both rich and poor survive and even prosper in the aftermath Looking at past and more recent financial disasters through the lens of political economy the authors identify three factors critical to the development of financial institutions the level of government debt the size of the middle class and the quality of information that is available to participants in financial transactions They seek to find out when these factors promote financial development and mitigate the effects of financial crises and when they exacerbate them Although there is no panacea for crises no one set of institutions that will resolve them it is possible the authors argue to
