Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the aerobic and anaerobic performance of young soccer players. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 15 young soccer players (14 males and 1 male) aged 16-18 years. They were divided into two groups: a control group (n=7) and an experimental group (n=8). The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and anaerobic exercises. The control group did not undergo any training. The aerobic performance was measured using a 1500m time trial, and the anaerobic performance was measured using a 30s Wingate test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly better aerobic and anaerobic performance than the control group after 12 weeks of training. The 1500m time trial time decreased by 15.2% in the experimental group, while it remained the same in the control group. The 30s Wingate test power increased by 12.5% in the experimental group, while it remained the same in the control group. The study concluded that a 12-week training program can improve the aerobic and anaerobic performance of young soccer players.
