How Schools Change Tony Wagner, 2002-12-24 The first edition of How Schools Change chronicled the efforts of three very different high schools to improve teaching and learning in the early 1990s. Now in a new second edition Wagner concisely summarizes the decade long history of education reform efforts and revisits the three communities at the beginning of a new century.

A Race Against Time James G. Cibulka, William L. Boyd, 2003-03-30 We are in a race against time to save urban children from educational failure and to reform urban school systems before people give up on them. The authors examine the effectiveness of three reform approaches: systems reform, mayoral influence, and external state or federal intervention, using case studies from seven large cities as well as state and national trends. The social and economic transformation of large American cities after World War II laid the seeds for the crisis in urban education that has festered and grown since the 1950s. Decades of appalling test scores and failure rates and of unsuccessful piecemeal efforts to improve urban education have led the public and policymakers to embrace radical solutions to reform. Three approaches to the reform of urban school governance are discussed and analyzed using data from seven large cities: Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Washington D.C., and New York, national trends, and a statewide analysis of Maryland's school accountability system. The first approach, systems reform, focuses on improving the governance of urban education by overcoming policy fragmentation through standards for student performance, student assessments, and accountability among other things. Strong mayoral roles offer a second reform approach that largely reverses the Progressive era reforms of the last century, separating schools from city politics. Its supporters believe urban mayors can restore accountability, stability, and political support for urban schools. The third reform approach assumes that external intervention by federal or state authorities is needed to restore accountability and improve system performance.

Fabricating an Educational Miracle Jinting Wu, 2016-01-11 Illustrates the changing significance of what it means to be educated, rural, and ethnic in Southwest China. In today's China, education is translated into both acute social desires and profound disenchantment. Shanghai's stellar performance in the recent Program for International Student Assessment paints a celebratory image of educational success, yet tells only a partial story. For many in rural China, who are schooled yet prepared only for factory sweatshops, education remains an elusive ideal and offers a hollowed promise of social mobility. Fabricating an Educational Miracle laces together complex accounts of how compulsory education produces dilemmas and possibilities in village schools in Southwest China. Drawing from interviews, participant observations, oral history, and archival research in a Miao and a Dong village town in Qiandongnan Prefecture, Guizhou Province, this book examines the manifold and contradictory agendas that have captured rural ethnic schooling at a crossroads. This trenchant but nuanced ethnography offers a searing account of a suffocating snarl of scientism, audit culture, authoritarian pedagogy, and underhand dealings, a bureaucratic jungle that few individuals successfully navigate and in which most instead submit to the banal disfigurement of their cultural traditions for the benefit of well-heeled tourists or to the indignities of migrant labor in inhospitable cities Even those few who find an open door hesitate fearful that the lure of apparent opportunity might trap them and their families in an ever accelerating downward spiral Wu s deeply affecting account leavened and enriched by a wickedly ironic eye for the revelations to be extracted from the tiniest detail illuminates life choices and chances in contexts national local and personal It represents the ethnography of knowledge and education at its compelling best Michael Herzfeld Harvard University Jinting Wu presents a richly contextualized picture of education in contemporary rural China with a depth of knowledge and a command of ethnographic methods and appropriate theory that expands the picture beyond the confines of her research site and time She weaves the many details together with a skill that allows the reader to understand their larger relevance and to not become overwhelmed At the center of her levels of analysis is the dilemma that rural youth face as they struggle to decide whether or not to seek more education beyond what is compulsory As Wu demonstrates such a decision is not entirely if at all a decision John G Richardson Western Washington University Theoretically sophisticated analytically nuanced empirically vivid Fabricating an Educational Miracle could be the finest ethnography of education since Philip Jackson s 1968 Life in Classrooms established the genre Curriculum reform is no abstraction here we become intimate with its unintended cultural and economic consequences as these are lived by actually existing individuals inhabiting a temporally heterogeneous now Wu s accomplishment is exceptional it is profound William F Pinar University of British Columbia
