Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program. The control group performed no exercise. The primary outcome was the change in the physical fitness and health-related quality of life. The secondary outcome was the change in the body composition. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in the physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The body composition did not change significantly.
