

(Note) An error in paragraph organization has been purposely included in the first paragraph.)

Over hundreds of millions of years, liquid magma carries some of these metals toward the surface where miners could reach them. "It's also possible that Earth's gold deposits were formed when billions of tons of meteorites crashed into the planet and settled at reachable depths in Earth's mantle, where geologic processes slowly turned them into gold." This theory suggests that gold may be rarer than previously thought; after all, it came from outer space, if the theory holds true.
