stories about livelihoods and social issues A quantitative analysis of the key characteristics of coverage across different media types provides a detailed evidence base for understanding how poverty news was represented This includes examining the major contextualizing themes social groups and geographical locations most frequently covered the causes and consequences of poverty and sourcing It demonstrates how Wales based media coverage differs from more negative reporting typical of some sections of the UK national press especially in terms of stigmatizing discourses surrounding unemployment and welfare However important questions are identified about how news narratives convey meaning and especially disconnections between the coverage of macro economic trends or events and their consequences in the lives of ordinary people Additionally the book explores why poverty news coverage is constructed in the way that it is using findings from detailed interviews with journalists and editors about their practice Through the lens of professional values and experiences the book examines the challenges thought to affect poverty reporting Key issues include the contraction of resources and specialist expertise allocated to social affairs journalism the difficulties of identifying and reaching potentially vulnerable groups across Wales and representing case studies fairly and ethically A parallel set of interviews conducted with third sector professionals about their engagement with news media and communications practices provides a further insight into the production of poverty news Here the pressures in reporting poverty are seen from a different perspective where seeking to influence the coverage of poverty and respond to news demands can elicit professional tensions between journalists and the third sector and or productive cooperative relationships positively impacting news narratives In providing a detailed picture of how and why poverty news narratives are shaped as they are the book aims to provide an evidence base informing more meaningful representative and accurate poverty reporting in Wales   2008 Healthcare Standards Official Directory ECRI Institute Staff,Ecri,2007-12   EDP In-depth Reports ,1975   Report summaries United States.
