

The genre of text A is a report of an antifascist demonstration, ^{and} the purpose is to describe the event that took place. The intended audience is people who want to be informed of the goings on and the mode is written although it has been published online for many to see.

The protesters are represented as being in large numbers since they 'poured onto the street'. The dynamic verb 'poured' conjures up images of a liquid and suggests that the protestors flooded onto the streets in huge groups. This represents Donald Trump as being very unpopular because such vast quantities of people turned out to protest against him.

The demonstration area is represented as hostile and intimidating in the declarative simple sentence 'people stare each other down along the front line'. The preposition phrase 'along the front line' creates the semantic field of war and conflict which suggests that the protest was very dangerous and threatening. This semantic field is continued throughout the text with verbs such as 'retreat' and noun phrases such as 'battle cry'. This represents the demonstration as being on par with wars which suggests it is a very serious event and the two groups need intervention to promote peace between them.

The writer is represented as being dubious of the police force in the simple declarative 'the riot police forces are conspicuously absent'. The adjective 'conspicuously' suggests that the absence of the police was very notable for the writer and something of importance that stood out to them, perhaps suggesting that they believe there is corruption in the riot police which allowed the antifascist demonstration to escalate to such high levels of conflict. Furthermore this represents the police force negatively because it seems its priorities are distorted and intentions unclear.

The opposition to the antifascists is represented as being very tough and ready to take them on. The complex sentence 'when the leftists get close to the stage, the leader of the Three Percenters orders his men to rally up and take defensive positions' uses the subordinate adverbial clause 'when...' to show that whatever move the antifascists made, the opposition were ready to move against them. Since this is the subordinate clause in the complex sentence and the description of the opposition is the main clause, which can stand alone, it could imply how the Trump supporters are more resilient and prepared in the riot since they are more ruthless and defensive.

This idea of a stronger opposition is implied with the use of the dynamic verbs in that sentence, whilst the leftists 'get', the Trump supporters 'order', 'rally' and 'take'. This represents the Trump supporters as more dominant and powerful over the leftists. This could represent the writer as more in favour of the Trump supporters in a subtle way since they represent this party as stronger.

The text is represented as a factual and accurate document due to frequency of simple declarative sentences such as 'it goes on like this for nearly two hours' and 'the riot police are conspicuously absent'. This comes across in a factual way because it is straight to the point and free from any additional information such as opinions or interpretations.
