Module 11: Neurophysiology and Integration

Introduction

1. What is the function of the nervous system? The nervous system is responsible for coordinating and controlling the body's activities. It receives information from the environment and the body, processes it, and sends out instructions to the muscles and glands to respond.
2. What are the main components of the nervous system? The nervous system is composed of the brain, spinal cord, and peripheral nerves. The brain is the central processing unit, the spinal cord is the main communication pathway, and the peripheral nerves connect the brain and spinal cord to the rest of the body.
3. How does the nervous system receive information? The nervous system receives information from the environment through sensory receptors. These receptors are specialized cells that detect changes in the environment and convert them into electrical signals that can be transmitted along the nervous system.
4. How does the nervous system process information? The nervous system processes information in the brain and spinal cord. The brain is the main processing center, and the spinal cord is the main communication pathway. The brain and spinal cord work together to interpret the information and send out instructions to the muscles and glands.
5. How does the nervous system send out instructions? The nervous system sends out instructions through motor neurons. These neurons are specialized cells that carry electrical signals from the brain and spinal cord to the muscles and glands, causing them to contract or secrete.

5. What are the different types of neurons? There are three main types of neurons: sensory neurons, which carry information from the environment to the brain; motor neurons, which carry instructions from the brain to the muscles and glands; and interneurons, which connect sensory and motor neurons.
6. How are neurons organized? Neurons are organized into a hierarchical system. The brain is at the top, followed by the spinal cord, and then the peripheral nerves. The brain and spinal cord are the central nervous system, and the peripheral nerves are the peripheral nervous system.
7. How does the nervous system maintain homeostasis? The nervous system maintains homeostasis by monitoring the body's internal environment and sending out instructions to the muscles and glands to keep it stable. For example, if the body is too hot, the nervous system will send out instructions to the sweat glands to produce sweat, which will cool the body down.

The Nervous System: Function

1. What are the main functions of the nervous system? The nervous system has several main functions: to receive information from the environment, to process that information, and to send out instructions to the muscles and glands to respond.
