Food safety in Kenya: Focus on fruits and vegetables Yen, Eric, Hoffman, Vivian, Grace, Delia, Karugia, Joseph, 2018-03-16 Consumption of fruits and vegetables is important for maintaining good health and preventing chronic disease Kenyans consume too little of these foods relative to dietary recommendations Contaminated fruits and vegetables are an important conduit of foodborne disease FBD which represents a significant share of the global burden of disease particularly in Africa Improving the safety of fruits and vegetables and increasing their consumption are both important for improving population health Concern about food safety is high among consumers who shop at supermarkets and specialty grocery stores in Nairobi and prices for fruits and vegetables in these outlets far above those observed in open air markets This suggests significant potential for farmers to benefit economically from the production of safe high quality produce if credible certification systems can be developed The FBD burden as well as premium market opportunities for horticultural producers are set to continue to increase in Kenya as a burgeoning middle class demands a more diversified and nutritious diet Risk of FBD can be reduced at every stage from farm to fork Increasing awareness among farmers processors retailers and consumers is thus a critical step toward safer food in Kenya The Kenyan government has laid out a comprehensive set of actions to improve food safety in the 2013 National Food Safety Policy but these have yet to be implemented Many of these interventions could be taken up by county governments Success by KEPHIS in the enforcement of regulations in crops destined for export demonstrate the potential for public action to improve food safety in Kenya and should be emulated in the domestic market Ecology and Management of the African Buffalo Alexandre Caron, Daniel Cornélis, Philippe

Immunology Education Andrea Bottaro, Deborah M. Brown, John Gregory Frelinger, 2022-01-24 The explosion of basic and applied immunology in the first decades of the 21st century has brought forth new opportunities and challenges for immunology education at all academic levels from professional to undergraduate medical graduate and post graduate instruction Moreover developing methods and techniques for educating general audiences on the importance and benefits of immunology will be critical for increasing public awareness and support One major immediate challenge consists in accommodating within the confines of traditional immunology curricula a body of knowledge that continues to grow exponentially in both size and complexity Furthermore the practical toolbox of immunological research has vastly expanded and even in the present environment of highly interdisciplinary and collaborative science future immunologists will likely need to be at least conversant in for instance computational structural and system biology nanotechnology and tissue engineering At the same time our perspective of the immune system has progressively developed from primarily a host defense mechanism to a fundamental homeostatic system with organism wide physiological and clinical significance and with potentially transformative biotechnological and therapeutic applications As a consequence in addition to stand alone courses immunology is increasingly integrated into other courses or distributed longitudinally throughout a multi year curriculum This necessitates inter disciplinary approaches to reach an expanding range of disciplines as diverse as neurobiology cancer biology oncology infectious diseases pharmacology orthopedics and bioengineering Creative approaches and pedagogical flexibility will be needed to avoid the pitfall of one size fits all instruction and to tailor level and discipline appropriate content to different types of students using multiple teaching formats Finally like most other disciplines immunology education is also under strong pressure to introduce new didactic strategies that are relevant and meaningful to a generation of students who are digital natives comfortable with and expect on demand and multi modal learning diversified sources and active engagement Thankfully the dynamic and interactive behavior of immune system cells now visualized with striking immediacy by in vivo imaging has the ability to capture and hold the interest of even the most jaded learner The need for an increasingly immunology knowledgeable workforce not just academic and industry scientists but also clinical and research lab technicians biomedical engineers and physicians in a growing array of specialties will also expand job opportunities for immunologists as educators and for content creators dedicated to generating new didactic tools in this field
