

Answering Question 1: Government Moral Questions Why couldn't the Government (should) document the United States' African History, which it created?

Historical Context:

African-American leadership across America pushed us to get a lot of government programs. But before the war, the federal government was not working on documenting African-American history. George Fredson's book Black History: The Search for African-American Roots was published in 1965. It was one of the first books to look at the history of African-American people. It was also one of the first books to look at the history of African-American people. It was also one of the first books to look at the history of African-American people.

After 1965, the federal government, the state government, the local government, and the private sector all began to document African-American history. This was a big step forward for the African-American community.

Big questions:

Why did it take so long to document African-American history? What were the reasons for this delay?

Big answers:

The government did not have the resources to document African-American history. It was not until the 1960s that the government began to take an interest in African-American history. This was a big step forward for the African-American community.

• One of the main reasons for this delay was the lack of funding for African-American history.

• Another reason was the lack of interest in African-American history by the general public. This was a big step forward for the African-American community.

Question 2: Why did the federal government

Paul J. Yoder, Aaron P. Johnson, 2022-05-01 Traumagenic events episodes that have caused or are likely to cause trauma color the experiences of K 12 students and the social studies curriculum they encounter in U S schools At the same time that the global COVID 19 pandemic has heightened educators awareness of collective trauma the racial reckoning of 2020 has drawn important attention to historical and transgenerational trauma At a time when social studies educators can simply no longer ignore difficult knowledge instruction that acknowledges trauma in social studies classrooms is essential Through employing relational pedagogies and foregrounding voices that are too often silenced the lessons in Hollywood or History An Inquiry

Based Strategy for Using Film to Acknowledge Trauma in Social Studies engage students in examining the role of traumatic or traumagenic events in social studies curriculum The 20 Hollywood or History lessons are organized by themes such as political trauma and war and genocide Each lesson presents film clips instructional strategies and primary and secondary sources targeted to the identified K 12 grade levels As a collection they provide ready to teach resources that are perfect for teachers who are committed to acknowledging trauma in their social studies instruction

Hollywood or History? Scott L. Roberts, Charles J. Elfer, 2021-01-01 The challenges of teaching history are acute where we consider the world history classroom Generalized world history courses are a part of many if not most K 12 curricular frameworks in the United States While United States history tends to dominate the scholarship and conversation there are an equally wide number of middle level and secondary students and teachers engaged in the study of world history in our public schools And the challenges are real In the first place if we are to mark content coverage as a curricular obstacle in the history classroom generally then we must underscore that concern in the world history classroom and for obvious reasons The curricular terrain to choose from is immense and forever expanding dealing with the development of numerous civilizations over millennia and across a wide geographic expanse In addition to curricular concerns world historical topics are inherently farther away from most students lives not just temporally but often geographically and culturally Thus the rationale for the present text Hollywood or History An Inquiry Based Strategy for Using Film to Teach World History The reviews of the first volume Hollywood or History An Inquiry Based Strategy for Using Film to Teach United States History strategy have been overwhelmingly positive especially as it pertains to the application of the strategy for practitioner Classroom utility and teacher practice have remained our primary objectives in developing the Hollywood or History strategy and we are encouraged by the possibilities of Volume II and the capacity of this most recent text to impact teaching and learning in world history We believe that students connection to film along with teachers ability to use film in an effective manner will help alleviate some of the challenges of teaching world history The book provides 30 secondary lesson plans grades 6 12 that address nine eras in world history
