Training programs for the 1990s will have to be more comprehensive, covering a wider range of subjects and skills. The training of the 1980s was largely limited to the technical aspects of the job, and this is no longer sufficient. The training of the 1990s must also include the social and cultural aspects of the job, and the training of the 2000s must also include the personal and professional aspects of the job.
