1. Identifying the Problem: The first step is to identify the problem or issue that needs to be addressed. This involves gathering information, understanding the context, and defining the scope of the problem.
2. Formulating a Hypothesis: Once the problem is identified, a hypothesis is formulated. This is a tentative statement or prediction about the cause of the problem or the expected outcome of a solution.
3. Designing the Experiment: The next step is to design an experiment to test the hypothesis. This involves determining the variables to be manipulated and measured, selecting appropriate methods and tools, and establishing a control group.
4. Conducting the Experiment: The experiment is then conducted, following the designed procedure. Data is collected and recorded throughout the process.
5. Analyzing the Results: After the experiment is completed, the collected data is analyzed. This involves comparing the results to the hypothesis, identifying patterns, and determining the statistical significance of the findings.
6. Drawing Conclusions: Based on the analysis, conclusions are drawn about the validity of the hypothesis and the effectiveness of the proposed solution. The results are then communicated and shared with others.
