from a partnership between the American Federation of Teachers and the Learning Research and Development Center at the University of Pittsburgh The partnership brought together researchers and expert teachers for intensive dialogue sessions focusing on what each community knows about effective mathematical learning and instruction The chapters deal with the research on and conceptual analysis of specific arithmetic topics addition subtraction multiplication division decimals and fractions or with overarching themes that pervade the early curriculum and constitute the links with the more advanced topics of mathematics intuition number sense and estimation Serving as a link between the communities of cognitive reasoning and problem solving as fundamental to learning and teaching and to modern literacy The research on expertise and the development of competence makes it clear that structures of knowledge and cognitive process should be tightly linked throughout education to attain high levels of ability The longstanding pedagogical assumption that the attainment of useful knowledge proceeds from lower level learning based on the practice of fundamental skills that demand little thought to higher level competence in which problem solving finally plays an increasing role is no longer tenable It is now clear that thinking is not an outcome of basic learning but is part of the basic acquisition of knowledge and skill In learning to read for example decoding the printed word and understanding simple texts is an act of problem solving requiring inference and elaboration by the reader The prevalence of reasoning with information at all levels makes the details of its involvement a
