However, the industry has been very resistant to make the public more involved in the decision-making process. The original industry and public feedback was in the early 1970s, but it was not until the 1980s that the industry began to make more progress in this regard.

This system is designed to capture the essential (200–2000 Å) covered range, the one intended to capture the really big bang optical emission lines. The main reason for choosing the wide range is our interest in long exposures. The wide range is the compromise we had to make (it is believed that) the full covered range can be better summarized by a short series: ultraviolet, visible, the really red, the infrared, the radio and infrared satellite bands (we have been the first to attempt this). To maximize the life of the instrument during the long exposures we have chosen to use a 1000 Å resolution grating.
