

Codominance vs. Incomplete Dominance Review Worksheet

Different Forms of Dominance Review

Codominance is when both alleles, when present, are expressed in the organism.
(Both traits are visible in the organism)

Incomplete Dominance is when both alleles, when present, are blended to some extent resulting in a new trait.

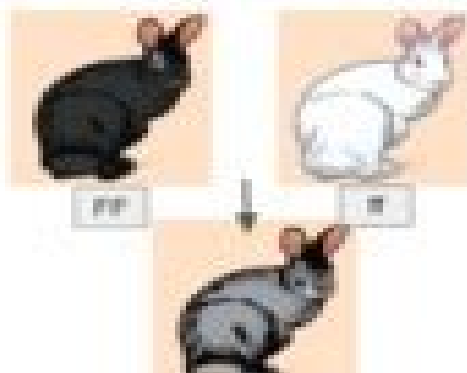

- The key with codominance is that you can identify the version of the trait dad gave and the version of the trait mom gave within the offspring...like the picture to the right

For the roan colored cow...her code would be $R^W R^R$

This means mom donated the white color (R^W) and dad donated the Red (R^R)

- The key with incomplete dominance is that the traits of the parents blend to form an entirely new trait (usually a mixture of what mom and dad have).

The offspring in this picture gets the code Ff which is a blend of the white and black rabbit. In this scenario, it makes the offspring grey.
