

SECTION N STEERING

FIG. 1
SECTIONAL VIEW OF STEERING BOX

The steering gear is a screw and recirculating ball nut unit, with the nut supported on the threaded lower end of the steering shaft, and with recirculating balls interposed between the working threads to provide the utmost efficiency and smoothness of action.

The primary (L.H.) rocker shaft which is attached to this nut, has rack teeth cut on the upper side which engage with teeth cut in the lower side of the secondary (R.H.) rocker shaft.

As the steering column is turned by the steering wheel, the nut is moved vertically, rotating the rocker shafts.

SECOND ISSUE

The steering drop arms are splined to the outer ends of the rocker shafts, which thereby control the front wheels by means of the drag links.

The centres of the rocker shafts and the length of the drop arms are so arranged as to ensure correct steering geometry and to permit change of track without adjusting the length of the steering drag links.

The top only of the steering column is supported in a ball race, permitting a degree of freedom to the unsupported bottom end of the column.
