Phil Gibson,Terri R. Gibson,2009 In his groundbreaking book Natural Selection Charles Darwin explained his theory that evolution is driven by adaptation of species to their environmental surroundings From the tiniest microbe to the largest whale all organisms have changed over vast expanses of time due to the forces of natural selection This new title in the Science Foundations series provides an overview of the processes and causes that drive natural selection and the principles that explain how it operates using numerous diverse organisms as examples Natural Selection promotes a solid understanding of how organisms change over the course of generations and how current biodiversity came to be

Evolution by Natural Selection ,2006      On the Origin of Species Illustrated Charles Darwin,2021-01-20 Darwin addresses some of the flaws in his theory of natural selection He tackles two major questions First if species have gradually descended from other species why do clearly defined separate species exist instead of numerous intermediate forms of species Second can natural selection really produce highly complex organs such as the eye from species lacking anything remotely similar to such complex organs To answer the first question Darwin argues that natural selection requires that intermediate varieties become extinct Since natural selection urges species to become perfectly adapted to their environments certain environments favor some characteristics and other environments favor others allowing species to diverge based on their separate environments The favored characteristics in these respective environments would become more advantageous than any intermediate characteristics causing the intermediate species to become extinct Darwin addresses the question of whether an intermediate species would exist in an intermediate geological area between the two different environments He argues that intermediate environments are so geographically small that intermediate species in those areas would not be able to reproduce sufficiently to perpetuate themselves and survive and would eventually become extinct Therefore we only see small numbers of intermediate species in these intermediate geographical zone Darwin is not as confident about the answer to his second question as he is about the answer to his first He admits that it is difficult to explain how new structures such as the wings of a bat are created when a species descends from one that lacks such structures He does give examples from other species in which modifications develop from existing structures instead of sprouting anew such as the species of flying squirrels with broad tails that allow them to parachute through the air a tail modified from existing tails in other squirrel species He also explains that scientists are unable to see a clear line of organ

modification because of gaps in the development of these structures for example squirrel tails that are not yet fully adapted for flying These gaps come about when the intermediate species have become extinct Examples of explainable models such as the flying squirrel s tail can help an observer imagine the development of more complex organs such as the wings of the bat or the eye Over time gradual developments of structures and nerves become more complex with modifications until finally the most perfect eye organ develops Darwin compares the eye to a telescope Over time and through its development the telescope has become more and more advanced replacing older versions While the mechanism of change for the telescope is technological advancement for the eye it is natural selection Darwin also discusses the existence of undeveloped and useless organs In contrast to highly complex organs that are clearly products of natural selection undeveloped and useless organs indicate that some traits might have been advantageous at one point and eventually waned in importance over time Primarily Darwin argues that science cannot always assume the importance or unimportance of a particular variation Some organs transmitted to a species but useless to it may have been useful to a distant ancestor Moreover some modifications that seem important to us may not be important at all For example if only green woodpeckers existed scientists would assume that the color green was important to the woodpecker s survival However many different colors of woodpeckers exist so color must be a result of sexual selection which is relatively unimportant for species survival The perpetuation of useless or random variations illustrates one of the principles of natural selection that selection of advantageous characteristics makes a species better than those before it but Evolution by natural selection ,1973
