1. The first step in the accounting process is to identify the business transactions that affect the business. This step is often referred to as the "analysis" step. It involves determining which transactions are relevant to the business and which are not. For example, a business that sells widgets would not be concerned with the purchase of office supplies for its accounting purposes. The second step is to record the transactions in the accounting system. This is done by creating journal entries that show the debits and credits for each transaction. The third step is to post the journal entries to the ledger. The ledger is a collection of accounts that show the balance of each account. The fourth step is to prepare the financial statements. These statements include the balance sheet, the income statement, and the cash flow statement. The fifth and final step is to close the books for the period. This involves transferring the balances from the temporary accounts to the permanent accounts.
