Human Body Organs

Kidneys

Kidneys are the body's natural filters. They regulate the balance of fluids and waste in the body. They are located in the back of the body, one on each side of the spine. They filter out waste from the blood and send it out of the body. They also help to regulate blood pressure and the production of red blood cells.

Stomach

Stomach is the organ in the digestive system. It is responsible for breaking down food into smaller pieces that can be absorbed by the body. The stomach has a muscular wall that contracts to mix food with stomach acid. The stomach also produces hormones that regulate the digestive process.

Small Intestine

Small intestine is the longest part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing nutrients from the food that has been broken down in the stomach. The small intestine has a coiled structure that allows it to fit into the abdominal cavity.

Large Intestine

Large intestine is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the food that has been broken down in the small intestine. The large intestine has a coiled structure that allows it to fit into the abdominal cavity.

Heart

Hear is the organ that pumps blood throughout the body. It is located in the center of the chest, between the lungs. The heart has four chambers: two atria and two ventricles. The atria receive blood from the body and the lungs, and the ventricles pump it out to the rest of the body.

Liver

Liver is the largest internal organ in the body. It is located in the upper right quadrant of the abdomen. The liver has many functions, including producing bile, storing glycogen, and filtering toxins from the blood. The liver is also responsible for the production of most of the body's proteins.

Lungs

Lungs are the organs in the respiratory system. They are located in the chest cavity, on either side of the heart. The lungs have a spongy texture and are covered in a thin layer of moisture. They are responsible for taking in oxygen from the air and expelling carbon dioxide from the body.

Brain

Brain is the organ that controls the body's actions. It is located in the head, protected by the skull and meninges. The brain has a complex structure with many different regions, each responsible for different functions. The brain is the center of the nervous system and is responsible for processing information from the senses and controlling the body's movements.
