

- Correlation versus causation: when individuals or teams mistake a correlation between two variables as causation
- They assume because two variables are correlated, one causes the other, when in fact, this may not be the case
- Troubleshooting is required when measurements fall outside thresholds (acceptable ranges)
- Exception plans should be developed proactively

Uncertainty

- Lack of knowledge or information about future events or outcomes. To respond to uncertainty in general, the team may:
  - Gather information: through experts, research, and market analysis
  - Prepare for multiple outcomes: have both primary and backup solutions
  - Use set-based design: investigate multiple designs early in project
  - Build in resilience: ability for team and processes to adapt and respond to unexpected changes

Questions to ask

1. Does team have an awareness of project environment to include technical, social, political, market, and economic elements?
2. Is team exploring and responding to uncertainty appropriately on the basis of project constraints?
3. Is there a risk management system in place to both address threats and leverage opportunities?
4. Is project performing on plan with little impact from unforeseen events and conditions?

Ambiguity

- Occurs when there is more than one interpretation of a situation
- Conceptual ambiguity: lack of clarity in the definition or understanding of project-related concepts, terms, or ideas
- Situational ambiguity: lack of clarity or certainty in project environment or circumstances
- To explore ambiguity, the team may:
  - Outline progressive elaboration: adding more detail as it becomes available
  - Experiment: to understand cause and effect
  - Develop prototypes: to help distinguish relationships between variables

Complexity

- Degree to which a project is characterized by a high number of interdependent parts, or a high degree of interconnectivity between these parts
- Complex projects are hard to plan and manage because of the difficulty of predicting what might occur
- To address complexity, the team may:
  - Iterate: use both iterative and incremental approaches that allow the team to deliver one iteration at a time, learn, and improve
  - Engage: work with stakeholders throughout project to engage them in decision-making and lower opportunities for miscommunication

Volatility

- Degree to which a project is subject to change or uncertainty
- Volatility may be addressed through:
  - Alternative analysis: identify different scenarios that could impact the project and develop alternative approaches to address those scenarios
  - Use of both cost and schedule reserves

Risk

- An aspect of uncertainty; an uncertain event or condition that may affect the project
- Threats are negative risks
- Opportunities are positive risks
- Risk thresholds: predetermined levels of acceptable risk exposure established to guide decision-making during the project

Risk Responses
For Threats	For Opportunities
Avoid: ensure threat won't occur and/or won't affect project	Exploit: ensure opportunity will occur and will affect project
Escalate: move ownership to someone with more authority than project manager	Escalate: move ownership to someone with more authority than project manager
Transfer: move ownership to a third party (e.g., insurance)	Share: move ownership (or partial ownership) to a third party
Mitigate: decrease impact and/or probability of occurrence	Enhance: increase impact and/or probability of occurrence
Accept: do nothing proactive (passive acceptance). Set up a contingency plan (active acceptance)	Accept: do nothing proactive (passive acceptance)
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Residual risks: remain after response has been taken and must be managed</li> <li>• Secondary risks: develop because of risk response</li> <li>• Risk reserves (cost and schedule) may be set up to address risks               <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Contingency reserves are for known risks</li> <li>• Management reserves are for unknown events that would lead to in-scope work</li> </ul> </li> <li>• Risks may be identified and/or addressed at multiple meetings, including daily standups, product demos, retrospectives, and status meetings</li> </ul>
