For example, a study by the U.S. Census Bureau found that the average household income in the United States is $25,000 per year. This is a significant finding because it shows that the majority of households in the United States have a low income. This information can be used by policymakers to develop programs to help low-income households. For example, they could provide financial counseling or help with finding a job. This information can also be used by researchers to study the causes of poverty and to develop policies to reduce poverty.
