

PROTEIN SYNTHESIS

TRANSLATION

1. Translation is the process of synthesizing a protein from an mRNA template. The mRNA template is read in groups of three bases, called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid.

2. During translation, the ribosome moves along the mRNA, reading the codons and adding the corresponding amino acids to the growing polypeptide chain. The amino acids are brought to the ribosome by tRNA molecules, which have anticodons that pair with the codons on the mRNA.

3. The polypeptide chain grows as the ribosome moves along the mRNA. Once the ribosome reaches the stop codon, the polypeptide chain is released and folds into its functional shape.

THE GENETIC CODE

"One codon at a time"

1. Biological systems use sequences of three nucleotides to specify the amino acids that are used to build proteins. These sequences are called codons.

2. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid. There are 64 possible codons, but only 20 different amino acids are used to build proteins.

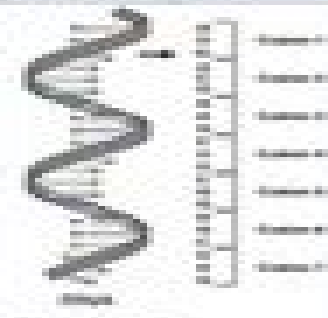

3. The genetic code is universal, meaning that the same codon codes for the same amino acid in all organisms. This is why we can use the same genetic code to understand the relationship between DNA and proteins in all living things.

4. The genetic code is a set of rules that determines how the sequence of nucleotides in a gene is translated into the sequence of amino acids in a protein.

"One gene - one protein"

1. Each gene contains the instructions for making a specific protein. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene determines the sequence of amino acids in the protein.

2. The genetic code is a set of rules that determines how the sequence of nucleotides in a gene is translated into the sequence of amino acids in a protein.

3. The genetic code is a set of rules that determines how the sequence of nucleotides in a gene is translated into the sequence of amino acids in a protein.
